

Future Work #12 from Yamasi People international@yamasi.org 4 Mayo, 2017 PFII16

Currently Agenda2030 implementation led by commercial enterprises prioritizes patriarchal indicators and colonial financing reliant on hard-currencies backed by militaries and forcibly-extracted metals. Therefore Yamasi ask the PFII to collaborate with EMRIP, and the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises and the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery to review the impacts of slavery on Indigenous Peoples in the past, compare modern forms of slavery, including the appropriation of Indigenous Peoples' cultural and ecological care work, and make recommendations for best practices to prevent and remedy slavery in the future. This may lead Agenda2030 financing for development to value indigenous economic models that enable women to have financial and social security through traditional trade that excludes prostitution, rape, prison, and slavery and upholds UN Slavery Convention of 1926.

Additionally we propose that the UN allow more flexibility in the 2030 Agenda to see how Indigenous Peoples' governments can negotiate our Peoples' Free Prior and Informed Consent to share our knowledge, policies, skills, and wealth of blessings residing in the winds, lands, and waters we protect. We ask the GA to allow UNDP to work with all volunteering Indigenous Peoples and Member states to develop productive peace processes that effectively include indigenous women ending violent conflict between colonial aggressors and Indigenous Peoples. We ask the PFII to ask the Working Group on Communications to evaluate human rights complaints in the context of development aggression against Indigenous Peoples with attention to small-numbered Peoples and refer their evaluation to the Working Group on Situations to be considered with advice from the Decolonization Committee in the context of its 2030 Agenda work to conserve territories of Indigenous Peoples' original nations.

We request PFII and EMRIP to set indigenous economies as a topic for the next forum. Indigenous economies enable stable societies for future generations where women and children have a secure economic position and are not homeless or vulnerable. We consider our ecosystem as the economic basis of our Peoples and nations. What Agenda2030 financing for development calls a 'bank' we call our forest, water, marsh, valley, desert, plateau, or jungle. We would like to share our model for sustainable economies with the world so we can mitigate and survive the climate change crisis.
