Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues
Fourteenth session
New York, 20 April-1 May 2015
Item 6 of the provisional agenda*
Comprehensive dialogue with United Nations agencies and funds

Note by the Secretariat

Summary
The annual meeting of the Inter-Agency Support Group on Indigenous Peoples’ Issues was held in Geneva on 1 and 2 December 2014. It was hosted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in accordance with the Support Group’s terms of reference and the practice established in 2002 of rotating the chair annually among its members.

The Support Group discussed, among other matters, key issues related to the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples (resolution 69/2), including follow-up by the Support Group of the recommendations contained in the outcome document. The meeting provided an opportunity to discuss the development of a system-wide action plan to ensure a coherent approach to achieving the ends of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and the utilization of holistic indicators of indigenous peoples’ well-being. In the outcome document, States committed themselves to developing and implementing national action plans, strategies or other measures to achieve the ends of the Declaration and invited United Nations agencies to support such implementation, as requested.

I. Background

1. As Chair of the Inter-Agency Support Group on Indigenous Peoples’ Issues for 2014-2015, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) hosted the annual meeting of the Support Group, which was held on 1 and 2 December 2014. Together with the Co-Chair (the secretariat of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues), OHCHR will continue to serve as Chair of the Support Group until the end of the fourteenth session of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (1 May 2015).

A. Attendance

2. The meeting was attended by focal points for indigenous peoples’ issues from 17 international agencies. In addition, the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the rights of indigenous peoples, Victoria Tauli Corpuz, the Chair of the Permanent Forum, Dalee Sambo Dorough, and the Permanent Forum’s focal point for the Support Group, Joan Carling, took part in the meeting. The list of participants is contained in annex I. The representative of OHCHR, Antti Korkeakivi, and the Chief of the secretariat of the Permanent Forum, Chandra Roy-Henriksen, co-chaired the meeting. The meeting participants adopted the provisional agenda, which is contained in annex II.

B. Opening of the meeting

3. The opening address was delivered by the Chief of the Indigenous Peoples and Minorities Section of OHCHR, Mr. Korkeakivi, on behalf of the United Nations Deputy High Commissioner for Human Rights, Flavia Pansieri. In her statement, the Deputy High Commissioner emphasized that cooperation among United Nations agencies working on indigenous peoples’ issues and between such agencies and the mandate holders working on those issues was critical for advancing the implementation of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, both at headquarters and in the field. In this work, the role of the Inter-Agency Support Group on Indigenous Peoples’ Issues was crucial. The Deputy High Commissioner also expressed her appreciation to the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF), as the outgoing Co-Chair of the Support Group and as the entity that had helped pave the way for the active engagement of the Support Group in the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples.

4. During the opening session, the Chair of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues underlined the importance of continuous inter-agency collaboration, in particular in the light of the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples and its outcome document. While there was no specific reference to the Permanent Forum in relation to the Support Group in the outcome document, the Permanent Forum should be involved in the development of a system-wide action plan on indigenous peoples. To this end, the Chair had sent a letter to the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs, Wu Hongbo, who is the most senior official in the United Nations system responsible for coordinating the development of the action plan, raising awareness of the rights of indigenous peoples and increasing the coherence of the activities of the system. In the letter, the Under-Secretary-General was invited to meet with members of the Permanent Forum and indigenous representatives, on indigenous territory, as a first step towards following up on the outcome document. The Chair also reiterated the need for the Support Group and the members of the Permanent Forum to hold an additional one-day meeting, at the fourteenth session of the Forum, to discuss activities initiated by United Nations agencies at the national and international levels.

5. The representative of UNICEF noted that the Support Group had played a key role in the coordination of efforts on indigenous peoples’ issues. The collaborative thematic papers prepared by the Support Group, in particular, had demonstrated the value added by the Group to the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples. That initiative could and should serve as a model for similar inter-agency efforts, including on human rights, gender and disability. UNICEF called on the Support Group to keep the rights of indigenous children and adolescents at the forefront of their deliberations.

6. With regard to the role of the Support Group, the Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples emphasized the need for increased inter-agency collaboration and coordination on indigenous issues at the country level. She also encouraged the Support Group to provide support for her country missions. Such support could include the preparation of summaries of United Nations agencies’ country-specific guidelines and programmes on indigenous peoples, as well as opportunities for technical and financial assistance to promote the rights of indigenous peoples in countries visited. She also suggested that a general overview of United Nations agencies’ budgets and resources specifically allocated to projects and programmes for indigenous peoples would help her in carrying out her mandate.

7. In a video message, the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs thanked the Support Group for its work in the lead-up to the World Conference. He noted that his responsibility lay in carrying out three interrelated tasks: coordinating the development of a system-wide action plan; raising awareness of the rights of indigenous peoples; and increasing the coherence of the activities of the United Nations system in that regard. That could only be achieved if Member States, indigenous peoples and the United Nations system cooperated closely. The Under-Secretary-General emphasized the significance of the reference made in the outcome document to the roles of the Support Group and the United Nations system at large in achieving the ends of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, and welcomed the technical and substantive input of the Support Group in preparing the system-wide action plan.

II. Follow-up by the Support Group on the outcome document of the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples

A. System-wide action plan

8. One of the main objectives of the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples was to define United Nations agencies’ actions to follow-up on the recommendations of the outcome document, including the recommendation that a system-wide action plan be developed in consultation and cooperation with indigenous peoples, the Support Group and Member States. Discussions on the issue focused on preparations for the development of the action plan and ways in which the Support Group could best support the Department of Economic and Social Affairs in that process, drawing on lessons learned by colleagues working on other United Nations system-wide action plans, including the ones on youth and gender.

9. The secretariat of the Permanent Forum provided an overview of the background, expected outcomes and proposed methods of work, as well as of potential timelines and milestones that could be considered in developing the system-wide action plan. Given that the action plan has to be developed within existing resources, the Support Group could consider whether to include a fundraising element in the process. It was suggested that, in the future, the Support Group could prepare a brief executive summary, an introduction including recommendations for action and a matrix clearly outlining the priorities to be identified during consultations with Member States and indigenous peoples.

10. Several participants stressed that the system-wide action plan needed to be responsive to the needs and rights of indigenous peoples, as well as to the needs of Member States, and fit in with the different mandates of United Nations bodies. It was also noted that the action plan should take into account indigenous peoples that lived in developed countries where there was no United Nations field presence, and that this would have implications in terms of identifying lead and support United Nations entities to implement the identified priorities and report on their implementation. The secretariat of the Permanent Forum also drew attention to the timeline established in the outcome document, according to which a progress report would have to be prepared by no later than July 2015 so as to be submitted to the General Assembly at its seventieth session, in September 2015.

11. Throughout the discussions on the system-wide action plan, the importance of the ongoing deliberations on the post-2015 development agenda was highlighted. A representative of the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) noted that the Support Group needed to consider how the sustainable development goals would influence the work and activities related to indigenous peoples and cautioned against developing it in parallel to instead of as part of the sustainable development goals. The representative of the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) said that the action plan and the sustainable development goals should complement each other; the action plan should not depend entirely on, nor be driven by, the sustainable development goals adopted by the General Assembly but, rather, be based on identified priorities and then be linked with the goals. A representative of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) stressed that the action plan should focus on implementation.

12. A representative of the secretariat of the Permanent Forum spoke about the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Youth, an initiative of the Secretary-General established in response to high levels of youth unemployment in the wake of the 2008 financial crisis. Since it had become operational in 2012, many of its aspects had changed, including the matrix setting out commitments and measures.

Key United Nations agencies had taken the lead on developing certain areas of the Action Plan, in terms of drafting the goals for the different focus areas, following up on those goals and reporting on their implementation. As will be the case with the system-wide action plan on indigenous peoples, the Action Plan had been developed within existing resources, which had proved challenging. One important lesson learned from the experience gained with the Action Plan was that the number of indicators should be kept at a minimum and that implementing entities should not be burdened with excessive reporting requirements.

13. A representative of UN-Women shared her experiences in developing the United Nations System-wide Policy on Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women, which applied to all entities, departments and offices of the United Nations and was structured around 15 performance indicators and standards. The process of developing the Action Plan included holding consultations with more than 50 entities, departments and inter-agency coordination bodies. The initial framework was piloted by eight United Nations entities and was then refined on the basis of a review of the results and challenges. To encourage implementation, the Action Plan contained technical notes on good practices for each performance indicator. The Action Plan was developed with very few resources, both human and financial.

14. The United Nations System-wide Policy on Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women had created a strengthened conceptual model by which to promote gender equality and the empowerment of women and led to harmonized reporting that identifies system-wide strengths and weaknesses. Importantly, the fact that heads of entities and senior managers had endorsed its implementation had revitalized and enhanced engagement. In addition, the Action Plan constituted a well-acknowledged response to Member States’ requests for increased accountability and focus on gender equality and the empowerment of women. Moreover, it had resulted in greater cooperation and healthy competition among United Nations entities, and enhanced clarity about what gender mainstreaming means for non-gender specialists. Challenges related to its future implementation included the continuous development of content and the continuous search for renewed commitment (to fight fatigue), a lack of adequate levels of staffing and resources, and the insertion of the Action Plan into the many legislative documents of each entity.

15. It was stressed that the system-wide action plans on youth and gender were very different in terms of their content, with the former focusing on external action and the latter focusing on mainstreaming gender equality within the United Nations system. As for the system-wide action plan on indigenous peoples, it was agreed that the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples should be at its core. A UNDP representative stressed that the ultimate aim of the action plan should be to support efforts that would lead to the realization of Member States’ international human rights obligations towards indigenous peoples. She also noted the importance of having data, including disaggregated data, and of ensuring indigenous peoples’ participation in the accountability and monitoring framework.

16. Participants stressed the importance of involving national and regional offices in the development of the system-wide action plan. A UN-Women representative suggested that the Support Group engage with United Nations country teams and that such country-level engagement could already begin. Given that national and regional ownership of the action plan was important, Support Group members needed to engage properly with their country offices, not only by sending information notes but by truly engaging with them to raise awareness of indigenous peoples’ rights, the World Conference and its outcome document, and the mandates and work of United Nations mechanisms that promote indigenous peoples’ rights. The representative of the secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity emphasized the need to take into account differences among Support Group members in terms of mandates and country-level presence, underlining that not all members, including his own secretariat, had country or field presences. The action plan needed to capture that diversity.

17. The representative of OHCHR noted that, in developing the system-wide action plan, the Support Group should be mindful of elements that may have been developed already. They included the guidelines of the United Nations Development Group on indigenous peoples’ issues, the Programme of Action for the Second International Decade of the World’s Indigenous People and the United Nations Indigenous Peoples’ Partnership.

18. Participants discussed the need to establish a small internal working group to take the lead on the development of the system-wide action plan. While the working group would consist of a handful of Support Group members, membership would be open to all Support Group agencies. The representative of the secretariat of the Permanent Forum presented a paper that included a proposed timeline for the development of the action plan and said that the fourteenth session of the Permanent Forum and the eighth session of the Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (July 2015) would provide opportunities to consult with stakeholders, including indigenous peoples. It was hoped that an advanced draft of the action plan would be ready for consideration by the High-level Committee on Programmes of the United Nations System Chief Executives for Coordination at its session in late 2015. A representative of UNDP said that her agency was committed to communicating developments regarding the action plan to Resident Coordinators through the Resident Representatives network. The Support Group also discussed the need to identify champions of the action plan, preferably Resident Coordinators, as they could help to give momentum to the process within the United Nations system.

B. Indicators

19. A session was devoted to a discussion on indicators on indigenous peoples’ well-being. A representative of OHCHR said that the discussion was extremely timely and that the Support Group might consider preparing key messages on indicators of relevance to the rights of indigenous peoples that could be fed into the process of deliberating and finalizing the post-2015 development agenda and the sustainable development goals. A representative of UN-Women noted that there were several subcategories of indigenous peoples, including indigenous women and indigenous persons with disabilities, which needed to be considered when deciding which indicators to operationalize. The representative of the secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity emphasized the need to build on existing Support Group members’ work on indicators, especially those that had already been adopted by various United Nations bodies, and that the focus should be on using the indicators already adopted rather than on creating new ones.
20. The representative of the secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity presented the work on indicators on indigenous peoples’ traditional knowledge and the customary, sustainable use of biological resources that had been developed and adopted in the context of the Convention on Biological Diversity. The four indicators on traditional knowledge and the customary sustainable use of biological resources adopted by the 194 States parties to the Convention had been suggested by indigenous peoples themselves. They were: trends of linguistic diversity and numbers of speakers of indigenous languages; trends in land-use change and land tenure in the traditional territories of indigenous communities; trends in the practices of traditional occupations; and trends in the degree to which traditional knowledge and practices are respected through their full integration, safeguards and the full and effective participation in the national implementation of the Strategic Plan for the Convention on Biological Diversity. Those indicators had some weight, as they had been adopted by most of the States that had ratified the Convention. Suggesting that the indicators already established within the framework of the Convention could be used as a basis for the Support Group work on indicators, the representative called for a small internal working group to be established to work on operationalizing agreed indicators and consider their application to the post-2015 development agenda and the sustainable development goals.

21. It was proposed that such a working group should also focus on operationalizing the indicators developed under the Convention and by others within the United Nations system. The working group should also be encouraged to consider strategic questions, including the applicability of adopted indicators to other processes, such as the process for the sustainable development goals, and the need for additional indicators once progress had been made on the agreed indicators. Draft terms of reference for a working group on indicators would be developed and submitted to the Support Group for its consideration.

22. The representative of the secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity presented information on an indigenous initiative referred to as “community-based monitoring and information systems” and spoke of the potential for the initiative to contribute to the process for the development of indicators. States parties to the Convention had welcomed the initiative and were considering ways in which it could contribute to monitoring the implementation of the revised Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011-2020 and the Aichi Biodiversity Targets, including target 18, on traditional knowledge and the customary sustainable use of biological resources.

23. The representative of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) referred to the work of UNEP on developing integrated measures for monitoring in the sustainable development goals and the post-2015 process and the proposed indicators on common land and natural resources. The representative of IFAD outlined the work of IFAD on developing indicators on indigenous food systems and sustainable livelihoods; those indicators were being discussed in regional workshops in preparation of the second global meeting of the Indigenous Peoples’ Forum at IFAD, scheduled for February 2015. IFAD was also preparing a practical guidance note on how to seek free, prior and informed consent in IFAD-funded projects.

24. The representative of the International Labour Organization (ILO) provided an overview of a framework for monitoring the implementation of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples prepared by ILO in collaboration with the Asia Indigenous Peoples Pact, the Forest Peoples Programme and the International Work Group for Indigenous Affairs. The monitoring framework served multiple purposes, including guiding and orienting indigenous peoples’ self-determined governance, development and management strategies; holding States accountable by highlighting their compliance or lack of compliance with their human rights obligations; and providing information to guide and orient States’ and donors’ policies and programmes.

25. A representative of OHCHR referred to the integration of human rights indicators into the post-2015 development framework and emphasized the participation of concerned groups in the collection of data. The representative stressed that indicators should always be linked to human rights standards and reflect the indivisibility of human rights. Indicators played a central role in strengthening accountability and in highlighting the obligations of duty bearers. The Statistical Commission of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat was important in that regard and could be approached by the Support Group. It was emphasized that the recent report entitled A World that Counts: Mobilizing the Data Revolution for Sustainable Development, 2014 and, in particular, its considerations of human rights and data protection, could serve as an important guide to the Support Group’s work on indicators. The representative also referred to the recent OHCHR publication entitled Human Rights Indicators: A Guide to Measurement and Implementation, which aimed to assist in developing quantitative and qualitative indicators to measure progress in the implementation of international human rights norms and principles, including the rights of indigenous peoples. A representative of UNDP raised the issue of national human rights institutions, which existed in more than 100 countries. A large number of such institutions had been accredited A status in accordance with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (the Paris Principles) and produced regular reports on trends and issues related to violations, which could be useful. In addition, national human rights institutions played an important role in supporting national statistical commissions in developing rights-based statistical models and approaches for censuses.

26. Speaking of indicators on indigenous peoples and the sustainable development goals, the Permanent Forum’s focal point for the Support Group highlighted the need to look at indigenous peoples’ poverty in a more holistic way. Rather than relying on the standard threshold of extreme poverty (an income of $1.25 per day per person), efforts to measure indigenous peoples’ actual poverty should be linked to other factors defined by indigenous peoples themselves, including land security.

27. Participants discussed the proposal on the establishment of an internal working group to look into existing Support Group initiatives on indicators relevant to indigenous peoples. The working group would aim to operationalize a handful of indicators developed on the basis of consultations held with indigenous peoples and Member States. The representative of IFAD proposed that the Support Group hold a side event on indicators during the fourteenth session of the Permanent Forum, in 2015.

C. Role of and cooperation with national human rights institutions

28. In the light of the outcome document of the World Conference and its recognition of the important role of national and regional human rights institutions in contributing to the achievement of the ends of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, the participants discussed the role of national human rights institutions in promoting the rights of indigenous peoples. The session was chaired by the representative of UNDP, who stressed the important role played by such institutions in advancing rights-based policies for the most marginalized and gave specific examples of where they had played a pivotal role in supporting the rights of indigenous peoples (for example in Malaysia and Peru) and the growing recognition of the importance of national human rights institutions at the national, regional and international levels, including in the Human Rights Council universal periodic review process.

29. In her presentation on the role of national human rights institutions, the representative of the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights emphasized that national human rights institutions played an important role in implementing the outcome document of the World Conference, including in terms of strengthening reporting to the United Nations and in supporting and monitoring national action plans to implement the Declaration. To that end, it was crucial to ensure that national human rights institutions had sufficient human and financial resources and the capacity to promote the rights of indigenous peoples. United Nations agencies too played an important role in providing capacity-building support, including through training sessions and workshops to national human rights institutions so that they can effectively promote and defend the rights of indigenous peoples at the national level and report on States’ compliance with their international human rights obligations, including the Declaration, to the United Nations system. The representative of the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights emphasized that the United Nations system had yet to develop a harmonized approach on the effective participation of national human rights institutions in treaty bodies and human rights mechanisms. She added that the number of national human rights institutions with A status should increase.

30. The representative of the OHCHR National Institutions and Regional Mechanisms Section underlined the importance of having national human rights institutions participate in United Nations processes. Such institutions contributed to raising awareness about, and advocating for, compliance with the international human rights system and to translating international human rights norms into national policies. They also provided independent local expertise on the national human rights situation (e.g. on domestic laws and policies), disseminated recommendations from the international human rights system and conducted follow-up action, including by reporting to the United Nations system on States’ implementation of recommendations. It was important that national human rights institutions mainstream indigenous peoples’ rights into their work. It was emphasized that, at the national level, national human rights institutions were in a good position to advocate and advise States and also to participate in treaty implementation efforts. National human rights institutions could participate actively in the preparation of national reports by gathering and providing accurate information. They could also prepare parallel reports that focused on the implementation of indigenous peoples’ rights and, importantly, provide assistance with the filing of individual complaints.

31. At the international level, national human rights institutions could play an important role in providing accurate information to the treaty bodies, contributing to the list of issues and providing concise and up-to-date country information to complement national reports. While calling special procedures mandate holders’ attention to particular cases of indigenous peoples, national human rights institutions should encourage Governments to extend to mandate holders standing invitations to visit their countries, communicate and meet with mandate holders and assist in the preparation of country visits by proposing reliable and relevant interlocutors and providing relevant background information.

32. The Permanent Forum’s focal point for the Support Group indicated that lack of funding was a serious problem that prevented national human rights institutions from participating in meetings, including those devoted to indigenous peoples’ issues. It was proposed that a meeting could be hosted by the International Coordinating Committee for National Human Rights Institutions and that indigenous peoples attending the session of the Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, which attracts many indigenous representatives, could participate in that meeting. Participants also stressed that a good number of national human rights institutions participated in Permanent Forum sessions.

33. A representative of OHCHR introduced the manual for national human rights institutions that OHCHR, together with the Asia-Pacific Forum of National Human Rights Institutions, had launched in 2013. The representative explained that the manual had proved to be a useful tool to engage with national human rights institutions at the country level and enhance dialogue between such institutions, indigenous peoples’ representatives and government actors. She shared experiences arising from the outcomes of events organized in the Russian Federation and Southern African countries at which discussions had prompted requests for further guidance and partnerships to advance the rights of indigenous peoples through national human rights institutions. She added that the manual could serve as a useful guide for increased engagement between Support Group members and national human rights institutions.

34. The Chair of the Permanent Forum drew attention to a Permanent Forum recommendation on disseminating widely the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous People and to the need to reinvigorate efforts aimed at implementing the recommendation, including through any relevant training that might be needed. The ILO Convention concerning Indigenous and Tribal Peoples in Independent Countries (No. 169) and the Declaration were complementary and must be read together. The links to other international instruments and principles, including the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, were also highlighted. The Chair emphasized the need to monitor the jurisprudence and decisions arising from national human rights institutions and human rights treaty bodies and to continuously update those developments and share them with all human rights institutions, at all levels.

35. In order to amplify the effectiveness of the outcomes of the decisions of regional human rights bodies, such as the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and the African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights, national human rights institutions needed to be made aware of and incorporate those decisions into their work and assessment of human rights complaints. Implementation of the outcomes was crucial. In that regard, an important question that should be considered was how the United Nations could better support national human rights institutions to effectively compel States to follow up on decisions and recommendations issued by regional commissions and courts, as well as by the United Nations system.

D. National action plans and strategies

36. A representative of OHCHR said that the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights had been particularly involved in encouraging States to adhere to the commitment made in the outcome document to develop and implement national action plans, strategies or other measures to achieve the ends of the Declaration. OHCHR was committed to supporting States’ efforts to develop action plans on indigenous peoples. The representative recalled that the Human Rights Council, during its session in September 2014, had requested the Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples to continue to carry out surveys on the implementation of the Declaration. The Expert Mechanism was currently revising its annual questionnaire to States and would be including, in the questionnaire for 2015, an additional question on national action plans.

37. The representative of the International Land Coalition (ILC) said that ILC was developing national engagement strategies on land governance in 20 countries, as a result of which national platforms would be created to influence national land policies. Given that the majority of those strategies included activities with important implications for indigenous peoples, ILC proposed linking Support Group members with the national platforms and networks.

38. Members of the Support Group discussed the extent to which Support Group involvement in national action plans should be linked to the strategic programme frameworks (the United Nations development assistance frameworks) for the United Nations country teams. They concluded that much of the responsibility for following up on the outcome document, in particular in terms of national action plans, rested with Member States and that coordination of the implementation of the outcome document’s recommendations would, by and large, take place at the national level. That had implications for the United Nations country teams. They also concluded that the process to follow up on the outcome document, including by the United Nations system, should be linked to the United Nations development assistance frameworks. The need to link the national action plans to the frameworks was considered fundamental for ensuring a coherent and sustainable intervention. Recognizing that the frameworks had their own dynamics and timelines and that they usually took several years to be developed and finalized, it was suggested that the upcoming midterm reviews of the frameworks could serve as an important entry point for ensuring that the outcome document would be taken into account in the final framework.

39. The relationship between the national action plans and the system-wide action plan and the integration of the plans into the mainstream development framework, including with regard to national development and budgeting, were also raised.

40. The representative of IFAD said that under the IFAD grant supporting the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples, a second component would focus on policy dialogue and capacity-building for the implementation of the Declaration by Governments, indigenous peoples and the United Nations country teams and for the implementation of the outcome document of the World Conference. Six countries from Asia, Africa and Latin America would be covered. Those were opportunities to advance the development of national action plans. The grant component was implemented by the International Work Group for Indigenous Affairs in cooperation with the secretariat of the Permanent Forum.

III. Closing of the meeting

41. Participants provided an overview of their agencies’ activities relating to indigenous peoples’ issues and discussed possible areas for coordination and cooperation. It was noted that the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO) and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean were serving as Co-Chairs of the Support Group for Latin America. The representative of UNDP updated the Support Group on the new UNDP social and environmental standards, which included a standard specifically on indigenous peoples. The secretariat of the United Nations Indigenous Peoples’ Partnership provided information on an update to Partnership that had been launched in 2011 as a joint collaboration of ILO, OHCHR, the United Nations Population Fund, UNDP and UNICEF and that had become operational in 2012.

42. A discussion was held on how the Support Group could strengthen the intersessional work of the Permanent Forum. Participants discussed the possibility of holding a full-day meeting among Support Group agencies and Permanent Forum focal points before the fourteenth session.

43. It was agreed that representatives of IFAD, OHCHR, UNDP, UN-Women, ILO, UNEP and the secretariat of the Permanent Forum would form the internal working group on the system-wide action plan. Support Group members reiterated that the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples should serve as the basis for the plan of action and that consultation with indigenous peoples and Member States should be ensured throughout the process. The working group would convene in January 2015 and reach out to the wider membership of the Support Group on a regular basis.

44. An internal working group would be established to build on existing Support Group members’ initiatives on indicators. The working group would consist of representatives of the secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, ILO, IFAD, UNEP and OHCHR would look into operationalizing a handful of indicators relevant to indigenous peoples.

45. It was decided that a list of countries whose United Nations Development Assistance Framework was up for review would be prepared by the Support Group and that discussions on the matter would continue.
